This will be done in the applicants' home communities where it is necessary.

WHERE

The University of Toronto
Toronto, Ontario, Canada

WHEN

June 20 to July 31, 1969

DURATION

Six weeks, with five hours of formal classroom work per day, five days per week; plus a programme of social and cultural activities.

OBJECTIVES

The emphasis of these programmes will be on the development of increased oral and auditory facility in English. Considerable attention will be directed to the improvement of reading and writing skills, however. The overall goal will be to effect greater sophistication in the students' understanding and use of the English language.

COURSE METHOD AND SCOPE

Every effort will be made to maximize the learning opportunity afforded by these programmes. The student to staff ratio will be low; the most modern language, reading, and writing laboratory facilities will be employed; linguist-instructors will approach the learning of English as a second language with scientifically based methods designed to develop an English language reflex. Emphasis will be placed on the development of conversational fluency, with special attention being given to pronunciation, English structure, oral patterns of English and special vocabularies.

There will be appropriate levels of language instruction within each programme to provide optimum learning conditions. Final student placement in the various levels will be determined on the basis of extensive testing on June 20.

Classes in literature, dramatic art, history, and politics will complement the language training sessions. In addition, an extensive programme of social and cultural activities will round out the immersion environment.
